HUMANS

That which we call humans here on planet earth are, in essence, physically manifested, individuated expressions of a universal consciousness.

This manifestation is an omnicentrically co-creative part of what can be called the third dimension or the third level of density. This dimension consists of physical manifestations of higher dimensional levels, that is, levels of increasing perceived density due to decreasing differentiations. The purpose of this manifestation is to provide a constrained, temporally limited environment that has been configured to allow for advanced evolutionary progress for that universal consciousness.

More clearly stated, modern humans are higher density level entities that have chosen, or possibly have been chosen, to incarnate into a “curriculum” here on planet earth. These bodies are “telluric blooms”, that is, they are extensions of the crustal layer of this planet, the telluric layer. But our DNA has been subtly modified to receive further modificational energy from the sun. In effect, we have bloomed from the earth and we are blossoming to the stars.

As higher dimensional entities, we exist outside of time and space. Time and space are a part of the constraining conditions of the third dimension. The conditions under which we exist here in the third dimension have been engineered over third dimensional millennia to create an environment that is conducive to this curriculum. Through us, in accordance with the Law of One, Universal Consciousness is engaged in the process of omnicentric co-creation, continuing to create an environment that supports further evolution through the constraining conditions of the third dimension.

Planet earth is one of many similar ”living” worlds that have been modified in the third dimension for this purpose. This environmental engineering has been ongoing for many millions of third dimension years and has involved planoforming as well as the subtle genetic manipulation of the indigenous bipedal life form. Earth is now the third density home of a species that is dimensionally transitory in nature.

This is evidenced by the observation that modern humans are not a natural part of the evolved planetary ecosystem. Humans are not able to exist on this planet without creating a completely contrived environment. They must clothe themselves and live in fully conditioned domiciles. For the most part, they are not a functioning part of the natural ecology of the planet. Instead, they live off that system in a non-recursive fashion, that is, the relationship between humans and the earth is not bi-directional. Humans take from the planet what they need but they do not give back. Practically speaking, humans are not a part of the food chain. They “feed” off the natural system that they have been injected into.

As a part of the genetic manipulation that, by some accounts, began approximately 450,000 years ago, humans ended up as an inherently divided race at a number of levels. All religions have cosmologies that describe this formative time. They speak of wars in the heavens and a human race that descended from God or the gods and was created in their image. They speak of a “Garden of Eden” that was created for a first perfect human and of that human’s subsequent fall from grace. A number of these somewhat more aggressively specific cosmologies converge on the account of refugees from an intergalactic war between advanced civilizations who found themselves orbiting planet earth in a damaged vessel. Earth had the materials they needed to repair their ship and, in the process of securing these minerals, gold in particular, they engineered some of the native population of primates to assist them and to eventually host their consciousness in advanced primate bodies.

This may sound like science fiction but the narrative fits neatly with religious myth that has survived throughout the modern era. Our progenitors remained with us for a long time in physical form as gods and god-kings, ensuring the development of this modified race of humans. Advanced civilizations developed on the continents of Lemuria and Atlantis where highly advanced technology was used for many things under the continued guidance of our stellar patrons. But events transpired that caused a radical re-balancing.

According to one cosmology, at the original point of manipulation one faction of the indigenous species was given a higher ratio of higher dimensional DNA than the other to allow for the development of a superior form that would be conducive to consciousness transference. This condition was then further exacerbated by the “immigration” of other higher density civilizations during the period of population rebuilding after the disastrous Younger Dryas period. This is quite obviously evidenced by the incredibly diverse disparity of races occupying the planet. That period roughly 12,000 years ago was a formative time of rebuilding. Before the cataclysmic disaster, higher density beings from other star systems lived among us but slipped away before the disaster. Very few humans survived the cataclysm, and they lived underground for a very long time. Entities from a variety of systems showed up as these remaining humans were emerging and guided them forward. Even as the genetics of the human race continued to be modified, they continued to develop along two distinct ontological lines into numerous very distinct races.

Because of this inherent dichotomous condition, humans have been constantly vying amongst each other for positional superiority on the planet. Warfare has always been the norm as competing factions constantly looked for new and better territory. That warfare and intense competition among the races of planet earth continues to this day. Now, after countless generations of genetic mixing, humans have become an unbalanced genetic mix, with some containing a high level of high dimensional DNA at one end and others carrying mostly indigenous DNA at the other.

This societal structure may or may not have been by design. There are a number of ontologies that hold with the existence of an extremely high dimensional civilization that has agency over development in lower levels. All religions speak of “gods” and “angels”. All religions speak of “heavenly interference” in the development of mankind. Now, New Age psychics and channelers claim to be in contact with these entities as the earth moves into a new age of higher density level awareness. I have had , and continue to have, personal contact on a number of levels with higher density level entities.

These millennia of war and competition may actually be a part of our curriculum here on earth as we learn the hard way how to exist as one. Now, as we move as a planet and as a species toward a higher density level, we may be coming into a new era of peace and true oneness. But the question is….will all of us make that transition?

Planet earth has exhibited a “disaster cycle” over the millennia with extinction level events occurring roughly every 75,000 years. That cycle also breaks down to a shorter cycle of 12,000 years. History is very clear about these events, the last one being the Younger Dryas event of approximately 12,000 years ago. That means that we are due for another cataclysmic event at some scale. There is evidence of galactic waves that have a frequency that matches this 12,000 year cycle. These waves are caused by the axial tilt of the galactic core and they spread out through the galaxy. When stars are impacted by this wave, the stellar dust that has been embedded in the wave covers the star and causes what has been called a micro-nova as the star essentially “sneezes” off the dust. This dust, along with the accompanying stellar energies, impacts any planets in that star system.

Could this be the trigger for another transitionary time for our species?
